Robbed and Deserted by a Faith-

Children Recovering Money from the Brook-

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 6, 1874. A strange and eventful history, embracing ma-terial for a "romance in real lile," has just come to light in this city. The elements of a moving and harrowing novel are complete-including a misaliance, an attempted murder, an elopement and the regulation finale of death they need only to be mingled in the alembic of the sensational story writer and supplemented by those striking situaand tableaux which pertain exclusively to the realm of fiction, and which a lively and appreciative fancy would readily supply, to become assimilated into the form and substance of a pattern romance of the modern style. To the prosate and matter-of-fact writer for the daily press, however, belongs no such fanciful and airy task. His province begins and ends with the unfolding of a plain, unvarnished tale of simple

A. D. & R. L. Penney, attorneys and counsellors-at-law, one William Barthoné, a resident of this city, accompanied by his sister, a Mrs. Edwards, of Newark, N. J. Mr. Barthoné represented that that time there remained in trust in the hands of the Treasurer of the city of Brooklyn a considerable sum of money left by his father, who died in that city in 1864, and that, in consequence of the death of the party to whom the money was originally bequeathed in the event of a contingency hereinafter more particularly referred to, the fortune naturally and rightfully reverted to himself and his sister. Mr. Barthone (who, it may be remarked, is of French origin) then entered into elaborate details of a singular and painful family history, and explained the grounds upon which his claim was based. The attorney listened to the story with no common interest. The case was one of no ordinary character, and promised, besides the certainty of a liberal fee in any event, to call for the exercise of that marvellous acumen of which all lawyers in small cities fondly believe themselves to be possessed, and the result was that he accepted a retainer and undertook the somewhat Quixotic enterprise of convincing the Brooklyn Treasurer that the money which he had held unclaimed for so many years had found a A MESALLIANCE

The lawyer's first proceeding was to employ a detective to gather the precise facts in relation to certain incidents in the life of the deceased Barthone. The detective found that his first business in connection with the case would be in the city of New Orleans. Thither he accordingly proceeded. and there, after much patient and diligent inquiry, he learned the following facts:- In the year 1859 Mons. N. Barthoné, a wealthy shipping merchant of the Crescent City, became enamored with a beautiful creole, known as Sarah Waltz. This woman was gifted with all that sinuous grace, with all those seductive charms of person and feature for which many of her caste are so remarkable, and the wealthy merchant in time become so infatuated as to offer to make her his wife. The laws of the State of Louislana did not admit of miscegenation, however "mild" in form, and in order to consummate a legal union, it became necessary to procure a special license from a State court, and so removing in this case the interdict against mixed marriages. This license was issued by Judge I. K. Dixon; and, in due season, M. Barthoné and the lovely creole were joined in noly wedlock, the Right Rev. Dr. De La Croix officiating, and the feremony being attended with all the felat which the wealth and high standing of the bridegroom seemed to demand. tiful creole, known as Sarah Waltz. This woman the wealth and high standing of the bridegroom seemed to demand.

For a season that perfect happiness which is supposed to be associated with the honeymoon of wedded life appeared to dwell in the home of the Barthones. The mercannt was devotedly attached to his creole bride; and she, with all the elegant pleasures which wealth could provide at her command, seemed to leef that her lot was indeed an envision one, and that the goddess of fortune had been lavish in bestowing lavors upon her. About a year subsequent to the marriage, however, M. Barthone was taken ing layors upon her. About syear subsequent to the marriage, however, M. Barthoné was taken ill. His maiady was of a singular type, and baffled the skill of the eminent practitioners who were summoned to attend him. His creole wile was bowed down with woe. The blithness and gayety which appeared to be inherent in her nature were manufed in sorrow, and she remained almost constantly at the bedside of her sick husband. In her attentions upon him she was assiduous and unturing. She would suffer no one but herself to perform the little offices pertaining to the chamner of sickness; by her hand alone the spotle clustrs which the physicians pretaining to the chamber of sickness; by her hand alone the subtle elixirs which the physicians prescribed were administered. Her devotion and her grief alike were touching. But neither the medicine of the learned doctors nor the tender ministrations of the wife served to arrest the progress of the disease. M. Barthoné gradually falled duy by day, and finally, at a conucil of physicians, it was announced that the patient could not possibly recover. This distressing (act was broken as gently as might be to Mrs. Barthoné, who seemed almost distracted that the patient could not possibly recover. This distressing (act was broken as gently as might be to Mrs. Barthone, who seemed almost distracted and heartbroken by the intelligence. This was on a certain evening, and on the following morning Mrs Barthone had mysteriously disappeared. Not only had the creoic wife vanished but the rich wardrobe with which she had supplied herself, the costly fewels and trinkels which her husband had lavished upon her and a large sum of money belonging to M. Barthone were also missing. Even this was not all, nor yet the worst, for the search which was immediately instituted developed the fact that Mrs. Barthone, accompanied by one Hans Smith, who had been her follower previous to her marriage with the wealthy merchant, had embarked in the night on a vessel whose destination was some port in France. There was but one concusion to be drawn from these circumstances—the woman had and eloped with her old sweetheart. The flight of Mrs. Barthone, after all her professions of devoted attachment to her husband, combined with certain inexplicable symptoms of the malady from which M. Barthone was suffering aroused the suspicions of the physicians, who at once caused a chemical analysis to be made of the matter which the sick man ejected from his stomach. The result was startling, and fully confirmed the worst lears of the medical men. Copperas in very decided quantities was developed, and mrther examination convinced the physicians the poison had been systematically administered to M. Barthone with his medicine and lood for several weeks. As to who the poisoner was there of

As to who the poisoner was there of course existed no doubt. But one person had been melose attendance upon the sick man; from one hand had be received all the medicine and naturment which had been respirated for him. Mrs. Barthoné had been respirated for the part of the part of

to which they had been sent only to learn that they had quite a lortune in addition to his already ample means.

BEST AT LAST.

Life, however, had lost all charms for him. Wronged and deserted by the woman whom he had so passionately loved, berest of the children whose affectionate ministrations might have served to ameliorate in some degree his other all-sufficient griefs, there indeed remained no tie to bind him to the world in which he had met with such exceptional experiences and undergone so much suffering. That he was not doomed long to brood over the wreck of all his hopes was no doubt to him a merciful dispensation. His health, which had never been fully restored since his illness, gradually failed, and in the year 1864 he died. In his last will and testament he bequeathed the bulk of his fortune to his children; but, with that singular perversity in human nature which sometimes impels men to cherish an affection for which the object of it has proved most unworthy, he directed that a handsome sum should be placed in the hands of the City Treasurer of Brooklyn, to be given to his wife and would-be murderess in case she should ever appear to claim it.

should be placed in the hands of the City Treasurer of Brooklyn, to be given to his wife and would-be murderess in case she should ever appear to claim it.

REAPPEARANCE OF THE CHILDREN.

Shortly after the death of M. Barthone his son and daughter appeared to claim the fortune left them by their father. Their story was to this effect:—The daughter, while at school in New York, had formed an attachment for a young man with whom she became acquainted, and, recting that her father's house could be a home to her no more, she yielded to his importunities and married him. The son had led a somewhat reckless life, and not finding it strictly congenial to his tastes, had not long remained at the institution of learning where his father had placed him. On seeing the advertisement offering a reward for information concerning him, he thought it likely that he was wanted for some 'idiosyncrasy' in which he might have indulged, and he accordingly emisted, serving in the army for three years. Neither he nor his sister had been informed of the deep afflictions through which their lather had passed, nor was his presence in Brooklyn known to them. Their identity having been fully extablished, the property bequeathed them was given into their possession.

CLOSE OF A WICKED CAREER.

In the meantime nothing had been heard of the faithless creole wife. The money left her oy her forgiving husband was given into the hands of the Brooklyn Treasurer, and there it remained unclaimed from year to year. Recently, however, information reached william Barthone which led to the belief that the woman was dead, and he accordingly, as already suggested, caused the institution of measures to ascertain the truth. The detective heretoore mentioned succeeded in ascertaining that on feeing from New Orleans the guilty woman and her lover proceeded to Paris, where, so long as M. Barthone's money lasted, they revelled in the brillian pleasures of the gay Continental Capital. Hans Smith's love for the creole and the stolen money waned to gether, and whe

THE GREENWICH MYSTERY.

Recovery of the Body of George E.

GREENWICH, Conn., Nov. 6, 1874. The body of George E. Lockwood, the story of whose mysterious disappearance on October 28 has already appeared, was found yesterday afternoon by John H. Merritt, of Greenwich, an oysteron the mud flats in Indian Harfamous Americus Club house. The fact of the disappearance was not known till Saturday last. The deceased was engaged in watching oyster beds, having a home for headquarters on what is known as Captain Knapp Island, in sight of the cars as they pass Cos Cob bridge. It was Mr. Lockwood's habit to row each day from this island to the village of Mianus, re-turning at night to resume the duty of watching. A day seldom passed in which he was not seen by He had been to Mianus on Wednesday, and, contrary to his nabit, spent the evening there. That night his brother, who is captain of a market boat, was to sail for New York, and to save the labor of rowing four or or five miles he concluded to wait and pass down the harbor on the vessel. he did so, and at two o'clock Thursday morning, in good spirits, debarked in his boat, previously described, and landed, as is supposed, on Captain Knapp Island. Since that time he has not been seen alive. On sunday but no trace of a boat could be found. The cabin was entered and nothing to indicate foul play came to view. There were the cooking usensis used by deceased, articles of clothing and a condition of things generally indicating that the occupant had experienced no unusual disturbance. During the day a party of oystermen visited the island, told the sad story there and made arrangements for search for the missing man in that quarter. On Monday dredging parties were organized and the river and harbor bed was dragged. This was continued unceasingly till yesterday afternoon, when the body was found as stated. It was in an advanced state of decomposition, and had been in the water at least eight days. The hair was entirely gone from the head, the mustache was gone, the eyes had been entirely eaten out by sea crabs and the body much mutilated. The remains were conveyed to Greenwich, where

Was held this afternoon by Drs. Brush and Holley, of Greenwich; Dr. Trowbridge, of Stamford, and Dr. J. R. McCone, of Riverside. They found a horrible cut under the right ear, between the jawbone and spinal column, indicted by some snarp instrument, from which, in their opinion, death must have resulted almost instantly. The cut was two inches deep, and was found to have dissevered the juguar vein. They found no water in the lungs or stomach, but the brain appeared to have been congested. From these circumstances they agreed that deceased did not drown, but was fooliy dealt with and alter death was thrown into the water. The whiteness of the body and the absence of blood in the veins confirmed this theory. They further found an ugly puncture two inches deep on the right leg back of the knee, which appeared to have been inflicted by a boat hook. The pants in the locality of this wound id not show an incision. The body was dressed in the clothes

DEFRECOT PARK

Third Day of the Third Fall Trotting Meeting-Willie and Maurice Daly the Winners of the Postponed 2:45 and 2:33 Races-Lady Collyer the Winner of the Three-Minute Purse, and the 2:38 Contest Undecided.

The events on the card at Deerfoot Park yesterday drew together a very fair attendance. The postponed 2:45 and 2:33 contests were first called, the former taking precedence. Four heats had been trotted on Thursday. Willie having two and Logan a like number, and when the horses were called upon the track for the fith heat While was the lavorite in the pools. He won the heat and race, Logan taking second money and Handy Andy third premium.

Three heats had been decided in the 2:33 race at the time of post; onement. Daly having two, so that when the horses came for the word yesterday he was a long favorite. Lady Annie won the lourth heat and Daly the fifth and race.

First on the regular programme was the purse of $200, for horses that had never beaten three score—H. W. Howe's gray golding Henry Miller, J. Wilson's brown mare Maud and John Murphy's roan mare Lady Collyer. The latter was the vorite two to one over the others. She won, the race in three straight heats, distancing the field in the third.

seven out of ten entries appearing on the track. These were G. F. Harris' bay mare Linnie Case, W. S. Thoms' brown gelding Phil O'Neil, Jr., W. S. Coon's brown mare Mollie Parker, E. H. Heard's bay mare Sarah Jane, J. H. Whitson's bay mare bay mare Sarah Jane, J. H. Whitson's bay mare Pauline, William MacRoberts' bay mare Molle Carew and B. C. Murray's bay mare Nelle. The betting before the start was a little "mixed," Case being first choice at times, then Pauline selling lavorite, with O'Neil baying second place, who would occasionally be supplanted by a Mollie Barker bid, Case won the first heat in 2:35 and then sold as follows:—Case, $30; field, $12. Pini O'Neil secured the second heat in 2:35½; but Case still held her position in the pools. Pauline now came to the iront, and the third heat was placed to her credit in 2:36, when the betting men were a little at sea. Case, however, sold for as much as O'Neil, while Pauline, in a lew instances, sold favorite, with O'Neil in the field. There was considerable excitement when the horses received the word for excitement when the horses received the word lor the lourth heat, and numerous were the shouts of interested parties, who wanted the judges to see through their eyes. Phil O'Neil won the heat in 12:39, Pauline an excellent second, Case third and Neilie lourth. The judges distanced Case for running and at the same time thoroughly demoralized the betting fracernity, who had bought her against the field. At this juncture it was too dark to longer see the horses around the track, and the race was postponed until to-day at one o'clock.

EARLY CLOSING.

Meeting of Clothing Clerks at Cooper Institute, A meeting of the Clothing Clerks' Early Closing

Association and their friends was held in room 24, Cooper Institute, last evening, for the purpose of advocating the object of the organization and enlisting public sympathy in its favor.

The call for the meeting not having specified any particular time for commencing the business of the evening, the attendance was at first very thin, and it was near nine o'clock before the room was filled. Owing, probably, to the late hour at which many of the stores close a considerable number did not arrive till after that hour, and up to near ten o'clock members of the association kept dropping in.

At hall-past eight the chairman, Mr. Schaeffer, called the meeting to order, and made a snort speech expianatory of the object of the organization. In advocating it he speke very strongly against the system of making men aitend slore from break-ast hour in the morning till late at night, allowing but an hour for dinner and leaving absolutely no time for recreation or healthful amusement. The blame, he said, did not rest so much with the employers, but was caused by the present habits and requirements of the public and the want of organization among the clerks. He wanted to see the clerks in the various trades organized, with a view to attaining the object they were advocating, and to have them meet in convention and concentrate their energies on the task. There are 100,000 clerks in New York city, and they have it in their power to control every election, if properly organized.

The Secretary then read the minutes of the last meeting, which was held on the Friday evening previous, at Tivoh Hall, Eighth street, in the course of which the different speakers received such high praise that no small degree of metriment was occasioned.

The Chairman introduced Colonel G. W. De Koster, who delivered a very long speech, of the stump character, in the course of which he travelled over every imaginable subject, from the fables in the spelling book to the Bible and the Jesuits, but managed, withal, to say some very sensible and appropriate things on the necessity for organization and union among the friends of the early closing movement. The speaker was not a clothing clerk, nor, indeed, a clerk at all; but, to use his own words, a triend to humanity, the contended that the movement was not one of labor against capital, nor of politics, but one of numanity, and that, even with the best dispositions ammating the employers, organization was absolutely necessary to enable them to meet the demands of the cierks. He had particular, stress on the point that if th kept dropping in. At nair-past eight the chairman, Mr. Schaeffer,

After this speaker sat down the necessity for early closing from an educational point of view was loreibly illustrated by a young cierk making a poor attempt at a song in what he considered irish brogue, but which no Patlander in the room could understand. Mr. Swentzel made a very sensible and business-like speech on the movement, explaining the way the organization proposed to deal with it, and calling for aid and coperation.

After hearing some further speeches and songs the meeting adjourned.

Yard, Commissioner of Railroad Taxation, on a certiorari, which brought up the question whether the section of the charter of that railroad company exempting them from all taxation, excepting a percentum therein contained, is repealed by the general laws in regard to taxation of railroad corporations passed in 1873. The Court held that the question of repeal was one of legislative intent, and that the charter of the company not being irrepealable that part of it relating to taxation was repealed by the general law of 1873. The power of taxation could not exist under two statutes, and the earlier must give way to the later. Tax affirmed.

THE GLENDENNING TRIAL

Elder Dunne's Testimony for the Defence-A Pastor Caught Napping. The attendance at the Prospect avenue church in Jersey City, was very large yesterday. It was expected that Mr. Glendenning would take the stand and produce the paper which it is alleged he procured from Mary Pomeroy. The audience was disappointed. The proceedings were opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Goodman. Mr. James Dunne, one of the elders of the church, was then crossexamined by the Rev. Mr. Riggs, who was styled by the Moderator the "Metaphysician of the court." The witness testified:-Mr. Glendenning made some pastoral calls on other than Monday nights; have been with him on some occasions; a large proportion of the community think Mr. Glendenning guilty; at the joint meeting of trustees and deacons Miss Pomeroy's statement was not considered; the subject was discussed altogether probably on his; think all took part in that discussion; there was no difference of opinion; DEVEL SAW

To Mr. Marshall—I think Mr. Giendenning visited Miss Pomeroy to converse with her on religious subjects previous to her admission to the church; the rumor of the intimacy between Mr. Glendenning and Miss Pomeroy began after her admission to the church.

To Mr. Wall—I should not have been surprised to see Mr. Glendenning come out of the Bible class room; should not be surprised if he took a short nap if the weather was warm.

To Mr. Riggs—I can't say that Mr. Glendenning was in the habit of

TAKING NAPS;
I never knew him to take any.

Mr. Marshall asked the witness if Mr. Glendenning made a statement to him that he knew of Miss Pomeroy's condition before it was divulged and had talked with her about it.

Counsel for both sides objected to the question, because that testimony would be secured from Mr. Glendenning himself.

The witness, after having been subjected to a severe cross-examination, was allowed to retire. The prosecution intend to recail Dr. Burdett to give rebutting testimony on the points alluded to in Mr. Dunne's evidence. Mr. J. Mr. Dod the session was adjourned till Wednesday next. The testimony of Miss Agnes Cinton is not yet complete, and she will be called to give rebutting testimony. Her knowledge of the case will throw light on many points which now remain in doubt. There are twenty-seven witnesses to be called by the prosecution it rebutting testimony be admitted. It is very singular that Mr. Jones, a brother of Mrs. Miller, has not been called by the defence, though he is in daily attendance. He expresses his determination to vindicate his character from the aspersions cast upon it before the case closes.

A SAD WEDDING.

A Bridegroom "in the Hands of His Friends." NEW HAVEN, CORD., Nov. 6, 1874.

It appears that Mr. Henry K. Bradley, of this city, who was assaulted on a Shore Line train on years old, died; on the 25th of October he lost his infant daughter, Isabel Giffing, aged two years; on the 27th of October his wile, aged twenty-seven years, and on the 2d inst. his remaining child, Faith, aged eight years. A wile and three children swept away in the short space of lifteen days! Deep River. He was on his way taither to meet the bride elect when the occurrence, which will disfigure him for life, took place. Notwithstanding his terrible condition he kept on his way to Deep River. Arriving there late in the day he became helpless, and the morning of his wedding day found him covered with bandages and contrplaster. The intended bride, Miss Rose Wilmot, was waiting to receive her future nusband. Gnests from far and near, budden to the ceremony, had arrived, when it became evident that an important feature of the marriage would, by its absence, tend to the failure thereof. It was decided that the ceremony proceed. Mr. Bradley was, accordingly, dressed by his friends, and carried boddy by them into the presence of the officiating clergyman. The ceremonial was sad, by reason of its unexpected novelty, but the future of a pair thus united, it is hoped, may be correspondingly bright. Mr. Bradley will be conveyed from Deep River to New Haven to-morrow to testify in this case against ex-Engineer smith, who is charged with assault with intent to kill.

MEDICAL ELECTRICITY.

A meeting was held last night in the International Academy, room No. 18, in the Cooper institute, at which several practical electricians spoke, urging that the use of electricity as a medical agent should be advanced. Dr. J. S. B. Lord, who was chairman of the meeting, compared the human body to a musical instrument, and said that so long as the vibrations of the walls of its numerous cells go on in proper numbers there will be no discase; if, however, the vibrations are lessened discase results in the body, just as discord in the violin. He considered electricity—that is, however, only the element which is generated by proper instruments, and used by properly constituted persons—a wonderful curative agent, an incentive to the cellular vibrations. He urged that a class should be formed to study electrical therapeutics, anatomy, physiology, &c. in the international Academy, By means of these pupils acquiring faith in electricity, belief in it as a valuable therapeutical agent would be spread throughout the community. Professor Steele and several other gentlemen spoke in favor of organizing a class of students and also of establishing a free electrical dispensary. A committee was appointed to take charge of the latter project. meeting, compared the human body to a
